HISTORY OF DC

Founded on July 16, 1790, Washington DC was established by the Constitution of the United States to serve as the nation's capital. The precise location of the city, in between the Potomac River and the Anacostia River, was chosen by George Washington. He then appointed a man named Pierre Charles L'Enfant to design the city. L'Enfant created the city in the shape of a grid, with grand boulevards, ceremonial spaces inspired by those of Paris, and the Capitol in the middle.

DC was destroyed nearly as quickly as it was built. During the War of 1812 against Great Britain, enemy forces attacked and burned most of the city to the ground.

The Civil War was what brought the city back to life. On April 16, 1862, slaves in Washington were emancipated, which drew in many freed slaves and grew to be a home for many African Americans.

Since the war, DC has had a steady population growth. In 1901 the city installed a plan to rebuild L'Enfant's original designs.

DC remains a territory as opposed to a state, and is governed by a locally elected mayor and city council which Congress has the ability to veto.
